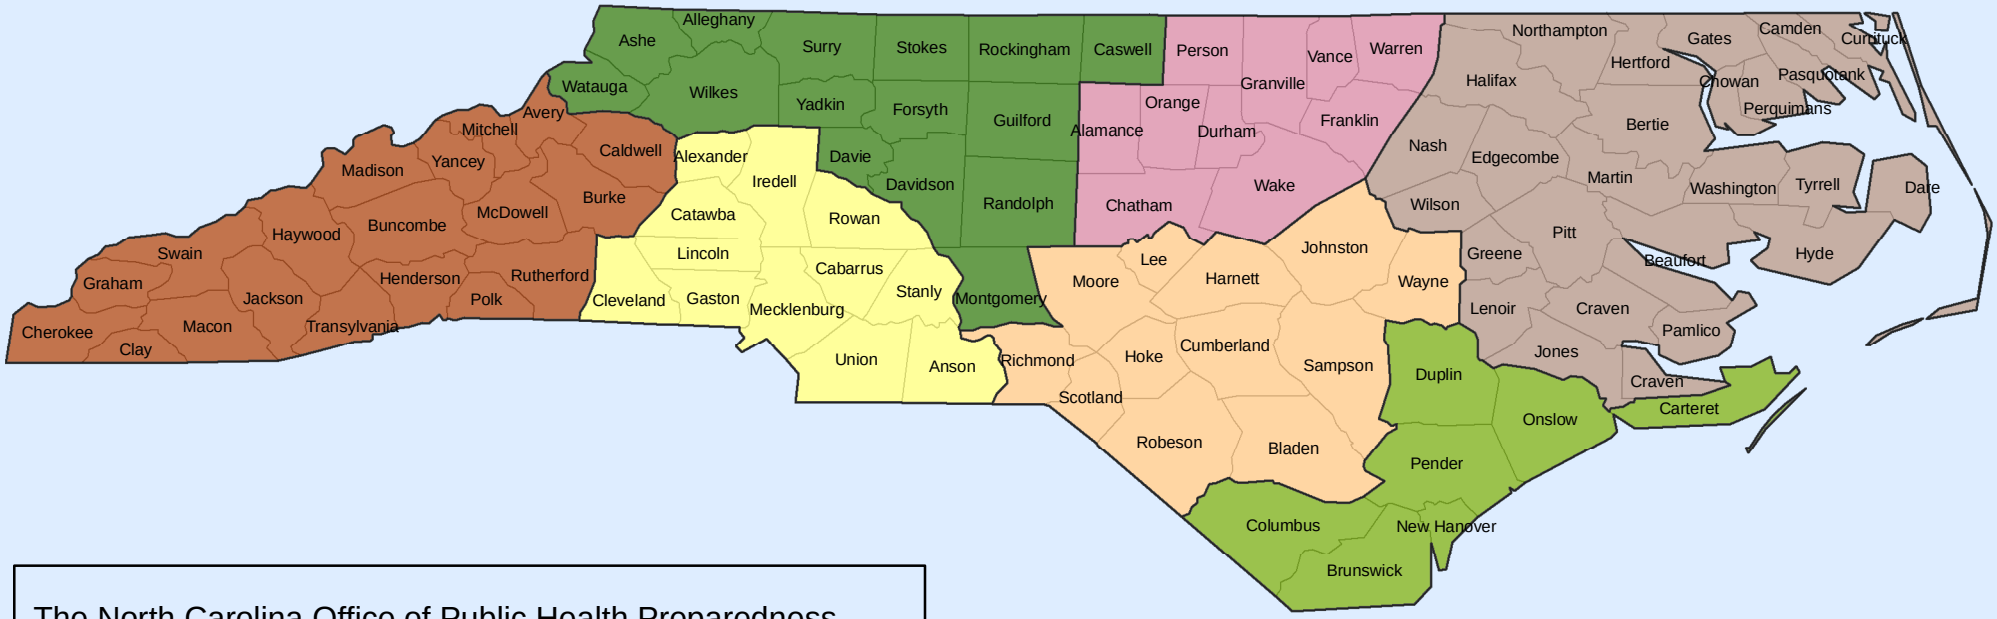
North Carolina Public Health Regions



The North Carolina Office of Public Health Preparedness and Response (NCPHP&R) was created in November 2001 in an attempt to address biological attacks. Beside bioterrorism preparedness, the PHP&R was tasked with revitalizing disease prevention and detection infrastructure in the state. In 2002, federal grant money was made available to the Public Health Division for the official creation of the office of PHP&R. Seven Public Health Regional Surveillance Teams were created to support local health agencies and the North Carolina Health Alert Network was created to improve communication between regions.
